MACRON CEMENTS BID AFTER BITTER TV DEBATE

Independent centrist candidate Emmanuel Macron appeared to cement his position as favorite for the French presidency as the dust settled on a rancorous final televised debate with far-right rival Marine Le Pen. Three days before the final round of France's most important election in decades, the premium investors demand to hold French bonds over German ones reached its narrowest point in six months, reflecting perceptions that Le Pen, the markets' nightmare scenario as French president, had missed her last chance to unseat Macron. At stake are two diametrically opposed views of Europe and France's place in the world. Le Pen would close borders and quit the euro currency while Macron wants closer European cooperation and an open economy. REUTERS

$20M SETTLEMENT IN BOY'S WATERSLIDE DEATH

2The family of a Kansas boy who was killed while riding the world's tallest water slide last summer will receive a settlement of nearly $20 million, local media reported. Caleb Thomas Schwab, 10, died of a neck injury in August 2016 at the Schlitterbahn Waterpark in Kansas City while on the water slide known as the Verruckt, or "insane" in German. The boy was found dead after finishing a ride on the slide, which sent riders plunging 17 stories at up to 50 mph. He was riding on a raft with two women who suffered minor injuries when the incident occurred, police said. The bulk of the settlement, $14 million, will come from SVV 1 and KC Water Park, two companies associated with the Texas-based water park operator Schlitterbahn, the Kansas City Star reported. REUTERS

'EL CHAPO' TO REMAIN IN SOLITARY CONFINEMENT

3 Mexican drug lord Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman will remain in solitary confinement in a federal prison in New York City, a U.S. judge ruled Thursday, although he will be allowed to send prescreened messages to his wife for personal reasons and to help mount his legal defense. Guzman's court-appointed lawyers argued in March that he was being held in unnecessarily harsh conditions in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Manhattan and asked that he be released into the general prison population. But U.S. District Judge Brian Cogan in Brooklyn ruled that there were good reasons for unusual measures around Guzman, who has escaped from two Mexican prisons. REUTERS

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

HOUSE BANKING PANEL PASSES BILL

5A House banking panel passed a controversial bill that would change how the U.S. government regulates the financial sector. With support only from the panel's Republicans, the bill approved by the House Financial Services Committee would eliminate significant parts of the Dodd-Frank financial reform law and place new restrictions on regulators monitoring Wall Street. The odds of the bill offered by Rep. Jeb Hensarling becoming law are long, given staunch opposition by Democrats to many of its central proposals. The bill marks the new Congress' first attempt to roll back existing financial rules after Republicans made gains in the 2016 election. President Trump has identified easing rules on banks as a component of his economic agenda and effort to spur lending and grow the economy. REUTERS

President Trump and Republican lawmakers gather after passing the House bill. (GETTY IMAGES)

The healthcare vote: What happens now?

No one knows how much the latest version of the American Health Care Act will cost or how many people it will cover.

sank the vote. This time, a compromise on requiring coverage for people with pre-existing conditions brought together those factions (but without enticing Democrats).

What’s next?

Obamacare remains in place for the moment.

The bill heads to the Senate, where it is ultimately not expected to pass. One Republican senator put the chances at less than 20 percent in the bill’s current form.

Republican senators plan to use a process called budget reconciliation to avoid a Democratic filibuster and pass the AHCA with only 51 votes. Democrats argue that what the bill does goes beyond what is allowed in budget reconciliation — a total connection to taxes or spending — and deserves a full vote that subjects it to the filibuster. They will likely win that argument: Even Senate Leader Mitch McConnell says it’ll be “a real tough challenge on the Senate side.” Even if the bill is substantially changed enough to gain Democratic support in the Senate, the House is not expected to approve those changes.

The bill did not receive a CBO (Congressional Budget Office) score, so it is unknown how much the plan will cost or how many people will lose health insurance were it to be enacted. That score is expected soon, but not this week. (The CBO estimated that the original version of the AHCA would have removed 24 million people from the insurance rolls and caused health-insurance premiums to rise 15 to 20 percent.)

Democrats will continue to be dismayed. “TrumpCare spells heart-stopping premium increases for Americans with anything from asthma to cancer,” House leader Nancy Pelosi said in a statement Wednesday. “But [Thursday], House Republicans are going to tattoo this moral monstrosity to their foreheads, and the American people will hold them accountable.”

MICHAEL MARTIN
@MetroPhilly

In their seemingly quixotic effort to repeal and replace Obamacare, House Republicans were third-time lucky. The latest version of their American Health Care Act squeaked by in the House, 217 to 213, although no one knows how much it will cost or how many people it will cover.

Two previous versions of the American Health Care Act were pulled from the floor of the House after it became clear the Republicans didn’t have enough votes to pass it. Democrats were united in opposition, and conservative and moderate Republicans split over whether the bill went too far or not far enough and

What does the AHCA consider a pre-existing condition?

Your guess is as good as anyone's.

letters@metro.us

In the latest version of the American Health Care Act that passed the House on Thursday, Republicans sought to loosen current requirements that insurers offer premiums at the same price, regardless of applicants' pre-existing health conditions. Those restrictions are one of the hallmarks of Obamacare.

The AHCA, aka Trumpcare, would allow states to opt out of that requirement. States could seek a waiver from the Department of Health and Human Services allowing insurers to charge higher rates to people with pre-existing conditions who allowed their coverage to lapse. They would be placed in "high-risk pools" set up with federal subsidies to defray the cost of premiums. Theoretically.

In a letter urging the House to reject the bill, no less than the American Medical Association said that high-risk pools "could effectively make coverage completely unaffordable to people with pre-existing conditions."

People who live in states that do not seek those waivers, and people who do not buy individual insurance — i.e., those who are covered through an employer — would not be affected.

So what is a pre-existing condition anyway?

The AHCA does not say. But before Obamacare, there was literally nothing holding insurance companies back. Many people with pre-existing conditions found their premiums unaffordable — or could not get an insurance policy at all. That could again be the case if the AHCA becomes law. The Washington Post reported: "In the past, some insurers had identified domestic violence, sexual assault, caesarean section and postpartum depression as grounds for either denying coverage or charging higher premiums. 'When you can't predict the future,' Alina Salganicoff, vice president and director of women's health policy at the Kaiser Family Foundation, said Thursday, 'one looks back to see what the prior experience has been.'"

On Thursday, Ohio Sen. Sherrod Brown tweeted out dozens of pre-existing conditions he said could result in higher premiums under the Republican bill, including acid reflux, acne, depression and high cholesterol.

Last weekend, Donald Trump said the AHCA "guaranteed" coverage to those with pre-existing conditions, but CNN pointed out that it was unclear whether he knew what he was talking about. House Speaker Paul Ryan said the AHCA "protects people with pre-existing conditions." The New York Times found those assertions "misleading" because the AHCA does not protect them from higher costs.

CNN listed the 11 states with the highest percentages of residents who have pre-existing conditions. All of them voted for Donald Trump.

Trump returns home, but not to Trump Tower

President Trump returned to his hometown of New York on Thursday, and security was heightened, especially around the already protected Trump Tower, where first lady Melania Trump and son Barron live.

But the president won't be staying in his home-away-from-the-White-House-away-from-Mar-a-Lago home.

Despite the Secret Service, heavily armed NYPD officers, barricades, checkpoints and street closures around the skyscraper where Trump has a penthouse apartment, he will be spending his time in the Big Apple about an hour away at his golf club in Bedminster, New Jersey.

During his campaign, Trump would return to his home of 30 years and sleep in his own bed in Trump Tower, but he has not been seen in the city since Jan. 19.

Trump said last week that he hasn't returned because the trips are "too expensive" and he feels "guilty."

"I hate to see the New Yorkers with streets closed," Trump told Fox News, adding that safeguarding his clubs in Florida and New Jersey is an easier task.

The City of New York spends on average $127,000 to $146,000 a day for the NYPD to protect Melania Trump and 11-year-old Barron when the president is not in town.

Those costs are expected to swell to a daily average of $308,000 when Trump is in the city, but a recent federal spending agreement will allow for reimbursement to cities like New York and Mar-A-Lago.

After a successful vote to repeal the Affordable Care Act, Trump took off just after 5 p.m. for his first meeting with Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull aboard the USS Intrepid. The president landed just after 6 p.m.

The extra time in Washington will cut the president's visit with the prime minister short in what some were looking at as a makeup visit after the terse phone call between the two men which Trump reportedly ended by hanging up abruptly.

Trump's homecoming marks the 75th anniversary of the Battle of the Coral Sea, in which American and Australian forces halted a strategic advance by the Japanese military.

Australian media called the "snub" a "comment on the weight he gives to the engagement with Australia."

New York City residents have long favored 212 as the region's most sought-after area code. PIXABAY

Manhattan mobile misery: Coveted 212 area code to become rarer this summer

A new area code is coming to New York City.

The looming arrival of a new Manhattan area code has triggered waves of dismay and anger online, while owners of the coveted original 212 area code swelled with pride on Thursday.

The proliferation of mobile phones in the most populous U.S. city prompted the New York Public Service Commission to say it will add the area code 332 in 2017, years after 646 and 917 joined the grande dame of Manhattan area codes, 212.

The new 332 area code will become active on June 10. Wednesday's announcement prompted outrage on Twitter from potential Manhattan phone owners, many of whom were worried they will miss out on the status that comes with a 212 area code.

"I just got an alert that the area code '332' is being added to the '212, 646, 917' area. Eww," tweeted Avee (@lilmissave).

Jane Dystel, a Manhattan literary agent whose work and home phone numbers for four decades have started with 212, described the area code as part of her identity.

"It says 'New York,'" Dystel said in a telephone interview on Thursday. "It signifies that you have staying power."

Pride of 212 ownership as a symbol of longtime city residency is so pervasive that it inspired an entire episode of the hit television comedy "Seinfeld." In New York City nightclubs, DJs sometimes call out, "If you're from the 212, please stand up!"

Attorney Karen Byrnes, 42, transferred her 212 childhood landline number to her cellphone more than a decade ago. Her determination to keep a 212 area code might seem foreign to millennials who rarely notice the numbers they save in their mobile devices.

"The 212 area code is special to me, but younger people have no idea how great having a 212 phone number is," Byrnes said. "It's old-school Manhattan."

Police: New York City sex crimes prosecutor sexually assaulted woman

Crismy Sagaille has two other prior arrests, both of which are sealed.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@MetroNewYork
nikki.mascali@metro.us

It sounds like a script from an episode of "Law & Order: SVU," but it's not. A Brooklyn prosecutor who spent the past four years serving sex crimes victims has been accused of sexually assaulting a woman who was giving him a ride home.

According to police, Crismy "Chris" Sagaille turned himself in to the NYPD's Special Victims Division on Wednesday after he had allegedly groped and kissed a woman in her car after they left a mutual friend's party in Brooklyn on Sunday night.

Sagaille, who currently has a suspended driver's license for a DWI arrest last year, asked the woman for a ride and allegedly grabbed her head and kissed her, police sources told the New York Post.

After the woman pulled back and yelled at Sagaille, he reportedly grabbed her breast forcibly before she pulled the car over and demanded that he get out.

According to the New

Brooklyn sex crimes prosecutor Crismy "Chris" Sagaille has been accused of sexually assaulting a woman. LINKEDIN

York Daily News, Sagaille was charged with sex abuse, forcible compulsion and forcible touching and was released on $10,000 bail. He will be prosecuted by the Staten Island district attorney in Brooklyn to avoid a conflict of interest since he has worked as an assistant DA in Kings County since July 2013.

"For him to victimize someone else, that's quite heinous," a source told the Post. "I guess he's now going to know firsthand what it feels like for all those other people he prosecutes."

The New York Law School graduate has been suspended without pay since he was arrested for the alleged DWI after running a red light on Aug. 6 near where he lives with his parents in Canarsie.

Sagaille was taken into custody after refusing to take a Breathalyzer test. The case is still pending, and police said Sagaille has two other prior arrests, both of which are sealed, the Post reported.

Man walks backward up Broadway to highlight beauty in cultural conflict

The performance-art participant was covered in gold foil as he walked from Battery Park to the Bronx.

LENYON WHITAKER
letters@metro.us

On Thursday afternoon, Peruvian artist Iván Sikic and Kumeyaay-Ipai tribe member Paul Cannon traced the old Wickquasgeck Trail, now Broadway's route through Manhattan, in a performance art piece meant to find beauty within the context of centuries of conflict between Native Americans and Western governments.

During the piece, which began at Battery Park and would end in the Bronx, Cannon wore traditional clothing and walked backward while Sikic covered Cannon's body with gold foil as the art piece progressed. This was Sikic's third such piece in a series that focuses on indigenous or displaced populations; two other similar pieces were performed in Melbourne, Australia, and Madrid.

"My intention is never to tell people that something is right or wrong. Rather, I only aim to highlight an issue in a way that opens a dialogue that I think is important," Sikic explained.

The disjointed gold foil was inspired by Kintsugi, a Japanese practice in which broken ceramic vessels are pieced together with lacquer and gold, which the artist intends as an homage to highlighting beauty within conflict.

Before the performance began, he believed that this New York version might be quieter than his two previous versions.

"I think the New York version may end up being quite understated," Sikic explained. "There is so much happening in the city at all times, that I feel like this piece may just exist in quite a silent way as it makes its way north from Battery Park."

He was intent on including a New York performance in his series, though, given the area's historical relationship to Native Americans.

"The seed for this work was planted in my head early in 2015, after I learned about the history of Broadway, and how it used to be the Wickquasgeck Trail," Sikic said. "At that point, I had already done the Australian version and was working on the Spanish project, and after learning about the history of this trail, it just felt natural that this had to be the third iteration of this series."

Compared to the other two previous performances, the New York piece was unique in that his collaborator, Cannon, wore traditional clothing.

"I felt it was important to respect not just the heritage and history that Paul embodies, but to also highlight the cultural richness that Native American tribes have, and I felt that one way of doing this was by inviting him to wear these garments," Sikic said.

NYC's best waterfront bars

Greenpoint's Brooklyn Barge Bar, docked in the East River adjacent to Transmitter Park, officially opened for the season Thursday. ALL IMAGES FACEBOOK

Floating barge bars, BYOB ferries and more spots to booze on the city's waterways.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

It's finally nice out! One of the best ways to enjoy the weather, of course, is to drink outside. Even better: drinking outside on a boat, or at least catching a breeze off of one of the city's many waterways, from the East River to the New York Harbor. Here are seven of New York City's best watering holes near the water, from ferries you can drink on, to floating barge bars, to waterfront piers — all providing epic views. Get tipsy, just don't fall in.

The NYC Ferry

The city's new ferry system officially launched May 1, decreasing fares (from $4-$6 down to $2.75) and increasing access (adding five new routes, including Rockaway and Astoria). And those aren't the only perks. The new waterway vessels come with New Stand concessions, offering wine and beer — Brooklyn Pilsner and The Gotham Project wine — on tap, no less! Knock one back on your way home as you wave goodbye the work day, or pregame before you wash ashore to another water-side drinkery. ferry.nyc

The Brooklyn Barge

This popular Greenpoint bar literally sits on a floating barge docked in the East River, adjacent to Transmitter Park. Sip — craft beers on tap and signature cocktails — and sway in the wake of ferries and tugboats passing through, while you take in epic views of the Manhattan skyline. There's also plenty to nosh on: Try the Tugboat Fries, topped with barbecue pork, cheddar and jalapeños. The barge offers a chance to get out on the water even more, with adjacent kayaking and stand-up paddle boarding offered as part of their seasonal programming.

Bonus: The NYC Ferry will drop you off right here, if you want to go from boat to boat, drink to drink. brooklynbarge.com

Staten Island Ferry

The Watermark Bar

The FiDi cocktail bar and restaurant juts out into the East River on Pier 15, just across the waterway from DUMBO. Sip an East River martini as you relax postwork, and partake in a menu of seafood and bar snacks. The 10,000 square foot venue also serves as an event space to host a party, catch a concert, or attend a festival or celebration — pretty ideal spot to catch the Macy's July Fourth fireworks show. watermarknyc.com

The Frying Pan

OK, so it's one of New York City's most notoriously bro-y bars, but we are not so high brow that we can't appreciate the chance to drink on a former Coast Guard lightship docked at the Hudson River's Pier 66. (The barge is millennial pink colored, FYI.) Pick from cocktails and mixed drinks, like a refreshing pitcher of white sangria, bottles and rotating craft beers on draft, or wine (rosé all day?), along with selections from the grill (calamari, burgers, steamed clams and more) and soak up that Hudson River view. fryingpan.com

The Staten Island Ferry

If you can't tell, we are pretty jazzed on ferries. Whether you're making a trip to and from the island or not, you can go on a joyride on the orange vessel across the New York harbor anytime you want — yep, service runs 24 hours a day. It's not only free; there's also no limit to how many times you can ride it, and the drinks aboard are cheap AF ($3-$4 for domestic cans) or you can BYO. When you arrive at Staten Island's St. George Terminal, you can always get out and do a drinking tour of nearby bars — or take a bike ride or a Lyft a bit out to the epic dive,

Grand Banks

The Frying Pan's more mellow neighbor to the South, this oyster bar sits on historic wooden schooner, the Sherman Zwicker, docked at Hudson River's Pier 25. Slurp on sustainably harvested oysters — both East and West Coast, selection changes daily — and sip on "nautically inspired" cocktails (try a refreshing

"Second Surf" of amaro, dry sherry, cucumber and lemon). It's also for a good cause; partial profits go to the nonprofit Maritime Foundation; catch some of their talks and lectures on their efforts at preservation and education aboard the boat bar. grandbanks.org

The Water Club

Back on the East River, this ritzy bar and restaurant floats off East 30th Street, on the other side of FDR Drive. The white table cloths, maritime plaques and hanging flags give it the ambience of a more casual yacht club — that's open to everybody, and moderately priced. The menu is standard American, with plenty of seafood options, including a raw bar; take your pick from cocktails, wine and beer. Floor-to-ceiling windows provide diners with deep blue East River views. thewaterclub.com

The can't-miss movies of summer

The season of big, dumb blockbusters actually made some room for women this year — and, of course, for big robots and Johnny Depp. Here are the hugest movies coming this summer. MATT PRIGGE

Blockbusters, but with women

Let's start off with some good news: Hollywood finally got around to making some summer movies about women!

But let's not go nuts here: Only about five of the dozens upon dozens of big releases this season are female-driven. But it's certainly up from all the years when the number was closer to one.

And so we've got "Snatched" (May 12), in which Amy Schumer heroically coaxes Goldie Hawn to star in her first movie in 15 years. We've got "Wonder Woman" (June 2), the first (and not the last) female-centric comic book movie of our modern comic book movie age. Thanks to the success of "Bad Moms," we have our pick of two movies about women behaving badly. On June 16 we get "Rough Night," which sounds like "Very Bad Things," only with Scarjo, Kate McKinnon and Ilana Glazer accidentally killing a stripper. Then on July 21 there's "Girls Trip," with Jada Pinkett Smith, Regina Hall and Queen Latifah having way too much fun.

And then there's "Atomic Blonde," which doesn't arrive until July 28, meaning we have to wait nearly three months to watch Charlize Theron kill everybody with her fists and her feet. It comes from one of the makers of the original "John Wick," and the trailer promises pretty much that film only with Furiosa from "Mad Max: Fury Road" instead of Keanu Reeves. And given how delightful "John Wick: Chapter 2" was, we're happy for more of just about the same.

Franchises, franchises, franchises

We regularly bemoan how same-y Hollywood has turned over the last handful of years, when every new movie is really just a sequel or a threquel or a continuation of some ever-expanding series. For the record, "only" about seven of the biggest tickets this season belong to already-going franchises.

So, yes, there's a second "Guardians of the Galaxy" (out today; see our review on the next page). There's yet another "Pirates of the Caribbean" (May 25), yet another "Cars" (June 16), yet another "Despicable Me" (June 30), and yet another "Transformers" (June 23). On the smaller sides, there's a cheapie sequel to "Annabelle" (Aug. 11), which was a spin-off of the "Conjuring" movies. And remember "The Nut Job"? That animated thing about a squirrel trying to get nuts from 2014? On Aug. 11, it gets a follow-up, and it's actually called "The Nut Job 2: Nutty by Nature."

These are franchise entries engineered to make money. But another one is out to save the world (if we pay attention this time). It's "An Inconvenient Sequel" (July 28), and it finds Al Gore returning 11 years after "An Inconvenient Truth" to give us a stern talking-to about not having done much to combat climate change — even electing an orange menace who thinks it was invented by China. Let's not let him make a threequel, for more reasons than one.

Wannabe franchises and reboots

Then there are the movies hoping to revive old brands. "King Arthur" (May 12) finds Guy Ritchie bringing his own crazy version of Camelot. "Alien: Covenant" (May 19) is both a sequel to "Prometheus" and a prequel to the original creature feature (read: It will be both a philosophical head trip and ridiculously gory). "The Mummy" (June 9) is back, now with Tom Cruise upstaging the undead menace. "Spider-Man: Homecoming" (July 7) is only the third new Spidey franchise in 15

"Rough Night" MACALL B. POLAY

Johnson and Zac Efron onto a misbegotten name that hasn't aged very well. Hey, the Rock is funny. And so is Zac Efron!

Actual original ideas

Remember original ideas? Hollywood still manages a couple of those a year, although they usually leave it to smaller companies. Such is the case with "It Comes at Night" (June 9), in which Joel Edgerton, Riley Keough and Christopher Abbott try to avoid being killed by some supernatural menace that lurks outside a remote home. Based on the trailer, it looks like this summer's "It Follows."

We're not sure what to compare "The Bad Batch" (June 23) to, being as it is an apocalyptic cannibal movie with Keanu Reeves, Jim Carrey and Diego Luna. Heist movies aren't very original, but leave it to Edgar Wright — and his new film, "Baby Driver" (June 28), starring Ansel Elgort, Jamie Foxx, Kevin Spacey and Jon Hamm — to make the genre feel fresh and fun.

Actually, maybe the most original movie this summer is technically "The Emoji Movie" (July 28), since no other film (far as we can tell) has ever cast Sir Patrick

Stewart as a pile of cartoon poop. Starting with the title, "Valerian and the City of a Thousand Planets" (July 21) sounds insane, even before you learn it's the biggest sci-fi spectacular Eurotrash auteur Luc Besson has made since "The Fifth Element." "The Hitman's Bodyguard" (Aug. 18) is a parody of sorts of "The Bodyguard," only with Ryan Reynolds saving Samuel L. Jackson. And you can always count on dumb comedies to provide original (or original-ish) ideas. All you need to know about "The House" (Jun. 30) is it pairs Will Ferrell and Amy Poehler.

Actual serious fare

Summer's the time to turn off your brains. But we've seen what happens when everyone turns off their brains, especially when they're heading for the voting booth. So every now and then, turn them back on again. Read "War and Peace." Learn a new language. Or go see a summer movie that's actually a little heavy, realistic, thought-provoking.

Far as serious fare goes, there's "Dunkirk" (July 21), an action film that's also a historical epic, in which Christopher Nolan uses his considerable power to lure the masses into the story of the World War II battle that turned into ing with it the hectic feel of the 1967 Detroit riots and the three black men who were killed by white cops.

"Detroit" looks great and sobering — but if we're honest, the movie we're looking to most of all this summer has the potential to be brilliant trash. It's "The Beguiled" (June 23), the latest from Sofia

Coppola and a remake of one of the craziest Clint Eastwood movies ever. Colin Farrell plays a Union soldier who winds up at a Virginia girls' school during the Civil War. And everyone there wants him — from Nicole Kidman to Kirsten Dunst to Elle Fanning. More than anything else coming out, it will make sure this is one crazy summer.

JUDGING A SLUGGER'S SWING

What has made Yankees rookie Aaron Judge so unstoppable at the plate this year? Metro breaks down the anatomy of the young star's swing.

LONG ARMS

Despite having long arms, Judge is able to quickly move them through the zone. That allows him to get to any kind of pitch and drive the ball to all portions of the field.

BACK LEG

As the foundation of that core strength, Judge's back leg is where he generates most of his power. By not lunging at the ball when it travels through the zone, he is able to evenly distribute his energy to his core and arms.

VISION

Judge's plate vision has improved by leaps and bounds in 2017. Last year, he struck out 42 times in 84 at-bats. This year, he has just 27 Ks in 88 ABs, waiting for his pitch, and crushing it.

CORE & MOBILITY

Core strength and hip mobility are one of the most underrated aspects of a power hitter. By keeping his middle centered while the pitch is on its way, Judge treats the middle of his body like a spring-loaded coil, unleashing and turning to generate power once the pitch he likes arrives.

All rise for New York's newest star. Actually, "star" might be an understatement.

Aaron Judge is more of a comet, or a meteor, or a supernova, given his swift rise to prominence in Major League Baseball.

The 6-foot-7 mountain donned in Yankee pinstripes has made pitchers around the league and the baseballs they hurl quiver in fear because of his sheer power.

After yet another bomb on Wednesday night against the Toronto Blue Jays, the 25-year-old made history, becoming the youngest major leaguer ever to hit 13 home runs in his team's first 26 games.

At the pace he is on right now, which he can't possibly maintain, Judge will hit 81 home runs this season.

That's a ludicrous number. It's highly likely Barry Bonds' 73 may never be touched again.

But is 60 in the realm of possibilities? It most certainly could be.

His ability to muscle the ball in all directions is staggering at times. He makes contact with such force that we have seen some obscene exit velocities off his bat.

A home run off Baltimore Orioles starter Kevin Gausman had an exit velocity of 119.4 mph, the fastest speed recorded since the stat's inception.

That kind of strength alone in Yankee Stadium could very well get him at least near the 50 home run mark.

It's going to get to a point in which the opposition just decides to pitch around him, at least at home.

Of his first 13 home runs, 10 of them came in 14 home games. He has three in 11 games on the road.

The impending return of Gary Sanchez will also affect Judge's home run output if the catcher can re-create his magical spell from last season.

Having the two of them in the middle of the Yankees lineup is as about imposing as it gets, but it's likely that only one of them will get something legitimate to hit each time through the order.

And this could just be a case of Judge being on a scorching hot streak. He was greeted with a ton of adversity upon his MLB debut last season and he had problems dealing with it.

In 27 games, he hit just .179 with four home runs, 10 RBIs and 42 strikeouts. If his bat were to fall into a lull like it did last year, no one is sure if it would derail his season.

Aries Don't let someone from your past interfere in your life. Anger and charged emotions can lead to disaster if you can't stand up for yourself.

Taurus Make time for fun. Get involved in a challenge that will encourage you to mix intelligence with physical power to reach your goal. A short trip looks promising.

Gemini You'll encounter an emotional setback if you are too quick to act on information that hasn't been verified. Take a breather and observe instead of participate.

Cancer Make special plans to surprise someone you love. Don't be afraid to do something different. A retreat or day at the spa looks welcoming.

Leo A joint venture may not be as good as you are led to believe. Take a second look, and, instead of getting angry, move on to a better offer. Create opportunities.

Virgo Emotional disillusionment will kick in if you rely on someone untrustworthy. Take care of your responsibilities personally to avoid being put in a compromising position.

Libra You'll be faced with someone who tells you one thing and means another. If you have doubts about the information you are receiving, say so.

Scorpio Make plans that will bring you closer to a loved one. Share your feelings and consider alternative lifestyles or living arrangements that will encourage equality.

Sagittarius Don't give in to unrealistic demands. Take care of your responsibilities but don't allow anyone to guilt you into taking on a burden that doesn't belong to you.

Capricorn Follow your gut feeling regarding legal or financial dealings. Know what you are up against before you get involved. Play it safe and avoid disappointment.

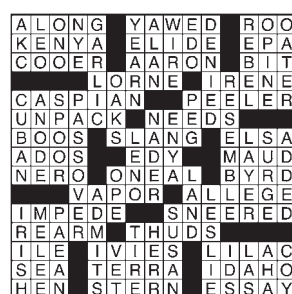

Aquarius Figure out exactly what's going on at home or with a partner before you make a change or decision that can disrupt your relationship or alter the way you live.

Pisces You'll get the wrong impression if you don't ask questions. Someone will send you mixed messages that can influence the way you do your job. EUGENIA LAST
